In an attempt to alleviate chronic back pain, Air Force Veteran Stephen Feters had back surgery that ended up failing and making his back pain even worse. He went to the VA to see what they could do to help. They provided pain medication that left Steven in a terrible state of mind. Finally, the VA pain clinic said he would be a perfect candidate for the pain stimulator. They sent him to Dr. Danko, who installed the pain stimulator.

“Now I don’t have to take any pills,” he said. “When I get up in the morning, the world looks totally different. It brought me back to the world again.” Stephen follows up with Dr. Danko’s office every few months to make sure everything is running smoothly. “I never want to be without this thing. Intimidation is the biggest fear. It’s not going to hurt you, it’s going to help you. The key is the support.”
